

Student appeals are initially addressed to the Department through the student's Personal Tutor who brings the issue for discussion at the Department Assembly. In case a student appeals as regards repetitive failure in examinations (exceeding 3 times), a re-examination of the student by a three-member committee as foreseen by law. In case a student appeal is not resolved within the aforementioned context, the student may address the University Office of Studies which, on the basis of law and antecedent events, advises the Department and -in exceptional cases- the Senate. Both the student and involved academic staff member are officially notified about the development of the appeal.

In order to express grievances related to academic or administrative staff students may also turn to the Student Ombudsman.
